Wit and Wisdom:
Humor in 19th Century New England
presented by Jo Radner
Wednesday, June 10
6:30pm

Whatever did New Englanders do on long winter evenings before cable, satellite and the Internet? In the decades before and after the Civil War, our rural ancestors used to compose and read aloud homegrown, handwritten literary "newspapers" full of keen verbal wit. Jo Radner shares excerpts from her forthcoming book about hundreds of these "newspapers" and provides examples from villages in our region. This program is sponsored by the New Hampshire Humanities Council.

Alfred Hitchcock intended Saboteur to be the American equivalent to his British The 39 Steps, which we saw in the fall of 2013. This 1942 film is Rated PG and runs 108 minutes.
